LOGO

The Random Garage Films Logo is simplistic, but also represents all elements of the brand. The logo revolves around a garage, where the garage door element is a film slate. This is used to represent both the garage and film element of the company. The font used in the logo, Barrio, has varying weights to represent the random aspect of the company.

The alternate logo removes the color and name, and can be used as an icon on any color. Inspiration was taken from other film studio logos that are either very rectangular or round, and are incorporated as a part of an opening scene. This logo can also be incorporated as an opening scene, using the film slate and garage in an animated segment.

COLOR SCHEME

The primary colors of Random Garage Films are Curious Blue and El Greco Bronze. The secondary colors are Black, Ruddy Blue, Blooming Orchids, and White.

The primary colors stem from trust and homeliness, as Curious Blue gives off trustworthiness and loyalty. El Greco Bronze compliments curious blue and gives the feeling of an old garage, akin to the name. It also portrays the homemade nature of the films, and dependability in quality.

The black and white are used as secondary colors to bring simplicity and classiness, akin to black and white films and film slates. They also act as readable text colors. Ruddy Blue is used as a background color element, enhancing readability and calm, and flowing well from Curious Blue. Blooming Orchids is used to highlight sections and adding a pop of color. Blooming Orchids stands for creativity, which is a big element of Random Garage Films.

TYPOGRAPHY

Random Garage Films' typeface is Barrio 36 pt. for Headings and Titles, Barrio 24 pt. for Subheadings, Merriweather 16pt. for Body Text, and Merriweather Italic 16pt. for Quotes.

Barrio represents the brand as its randomness of line weights represents the variety of films produced, and the random aspect of the name. Barrio is also attention grabbing and stands out in comparison to Merriweather. Merriweather is used for body text as it serif typeface, which is designed for readability. It is also a font pairing with Barrio, as both compliment each other. Quotes are differentiated by using the Italic version of Merriweather, as it is professional and still stands out against Regular Merriweather.

The icons are representative of the pages they go to and can be easily discernible. Upcoming films is represented by a film slate, a part of production process. Watch now, the page to watch released films, is represented by a play button, what is used to play films. FAQ (frequently asked questions) is represented by a question mark. Collaborators, a place to read more about the people who work for and with the company, is represented by a hand shake. Shop is represented by a shopping bag, where the user can shop Random Garage Films or film specific merchandise.

ILLUSTRATIONS

The visual aspect of Random Garage Films revolves around the creators, rather than the product, part of the key goals of the company. This involves using images of actors, editors, camera operators, etc. doing different parts of the film making process. There are also movie posters made by those creators that are used in the upcoming films and watch now pages to attract potential watchers.

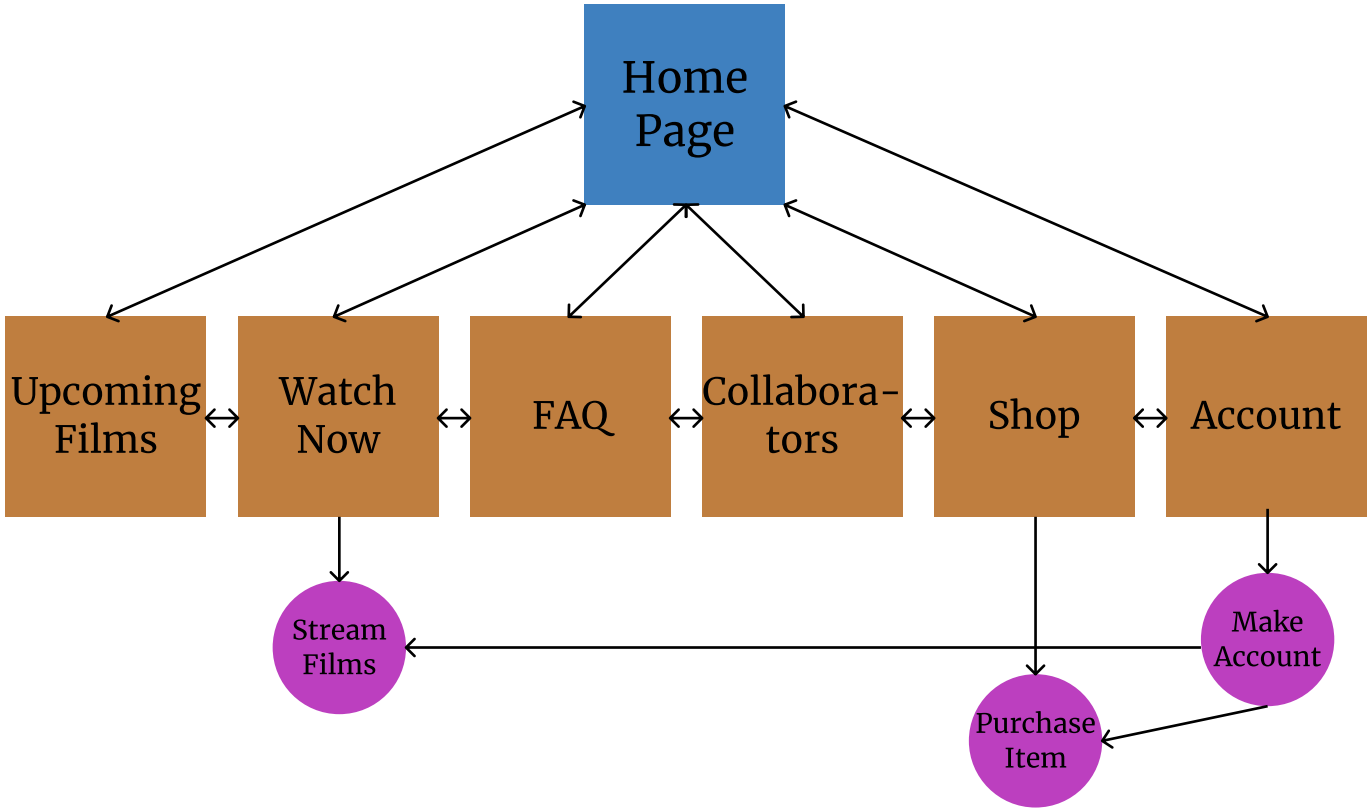
DESKTOP WEBSITE TASK FLOW



Random Garage Films' website is built around simplicity for the user, and the promotion of its films and creators. The Home Page is an introduction to the brand, with illustrations and a header with all of the primary pages. The Upcoming Films page shows a sliding list of films that are upcoming, with a name, release date, description, and poster. There are icons and gradient helping the user to scroll through the list. The Watch Now page lets the user watch films in Random Garage Films' catalog with a subscription. They are sorted in different categories: new, popular, short, comedy, etc. Similarly, they can be scrolled through and have gradient and icons. The FAQ page lists many different questions about the company, and ways to get in contact. The Collaborators page lists creators who are working with or for Random Garage Films, with video or written interviews/bios. The shop is a page of merchandise ranging from clothing (e.g. the T-Shirt design) to DVDs to collectible figurines around Random Garage Films' various films. The account page is used for making an account to sign up for the streaming service or to purchase items in the shop. The goal is to make a one stop website for everything related to Random Garage Films.
